The All-Seeing Eyes

20 0 1

Chapter 1 by Ravenisk

In the beginning, I couldn't see what was coming with my eyes. After all, I was only human and nothing could change that. But I didn't need strong eyes to make the decision I made in that dark, looming alley one day. I couldn't hear anything as I stood alone in fear. No footsteps, just the lone sound of air blowing across my dumbfounded self. And then it appeared, a large cloaked figure that glowed in the darkness that covered the area we found ourselves. I slowly backed away as it swiftly floated towards me. Then it bellowed, "Do you choose to bear the burden handed down by the gods who have looked upon your future?" I still stayed shocked as I glanced at it, but I didn't even believe what I said next. "I-i do..." I slapped my hands on my mouth, not knowing why I had said that. "Very well", the being replied. I then waved its hand at me and I immediately felt a surge of pain in my eyes. I bellowed out in pain and blood splattered out in front of me. My eyes burned, and then it happened. There was another glow in the darkness of the alley. And I realized it was coming from me, it was coming from my eyes. My new eyes that held a greater meaning. The being then said, "It is done." And that was the last time I saw it. It didn't take long for them to find me. I assumed they were there for my 'All-seeing eyes' as I heard people call them. They could see through anything: People's hearts, lies, fears, and especially the ones with darkness. And that was only the beginning of everything. Thought it felt like the end when those people found me and told me about a whole new world that had opened up to me and my eyes.
